PROGRAM NOTES

Although not well known today, Giacomo Meyerbeer (1791–1864)—along with Giuseppe Verdi—was arguably one of the two most popular opera composers of the 19th century. Born Jakob Liebmann Beer of wealthy Jewish-German parents, he was a prodigy and one of the most talented European pianists of his day. As a young man, he studied with the popular opera composer, Gioacchino Rossini, changed his name, and developed his own extremely popular opera style. Meyerbeer later moved to Paris, where he wrote many large, dramatic spectacle operas—among them, his wildly successful The Prophet (Le prophète). The “Coronation March” that is heard in Act 4 demonstrates the composer’s fondness for exaggerated expression and musical effects, and has become Meyerbeer’s most familiar and lasting composition.

A DIVISION OF

NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

The powerful sound of this classic march is now approachable for young players, bringing a spirit of grand excitement to your concert. The most memorable—and simultaneously challenging and exciting—musical element in this arrangement is the contrasting triplet/duplet figures throughout. The driving tension resulting from these rhythmic patterns, along with the wide dynamic range of the march, are cornerstones of Meyerbeer's musical expression and should be emphasized.

All triplet figures are arranged on repeated notes—not difficult for students to understand or play—and prepare them for future repertoire in 6/8 and 12/8. The conductor would be wise to ensure that students can readily differentiate and accurately play isolated triplet and duplet patterns (on open strings or scales) before rehearsing the piece. The necessity to differentiate the two patterns becomes evident in the opening section of the first theme of the piece (A1; mm. 1–9), particularly in the first violin part. Quarter notes in this section—and subsequent repetitions of the A1 theme—should be played marcato as indicated. By contrast, the second theme of the march (B; mm. 19–34) should be played dolce and legato in all instruments, with the first violins predominating.

To begin the extended coda (C1; mm. 51–54), accents should be emphasized. In the second section of the coda (C2; mm. 55–60), care should be taken that the firsts align the hooked bowing of their challenging triplet pattern with the ongoing triplets in the second violin and viola sections. Players should be advised to use full bow length on the three final chords (mm. 66–67) to close the piece with a dramatic flourish.
